The Funeral of Heenan.

The funeral of the late John C. Heenan was attended in this city by a throng of mourners and spectators such as the funeral of a hero of the war failed to draw. The body was sent northward on a special train on the Hudson River Railroad, and was met at Albany by a crowd of fully ten thousand persons. The coffin was covered with wreaths of immortelles, and the horse bore the inscription, "We Mourn our Loss."

What had the dead man done that his funeral should be thus made an event of almost national importance? Without the slightest desire to speak unkindly of him, it is still necessary to say that he won his celebrity exclusively as a prize-fighter, in which occupation he was unfortunately beaten by his antagonists, and that he made his living partly by holding a sinecure office in this city, and partly by keeping a gambling-house. Personally he may have been a generous and kind-hearted man. His name, however, is known simply as that of a pugilist and a gambler.

Now, according to the accepted code of morality, this man deserves no possible honor from the community, and his death was a loss to no one but his family and his personal friends. And yet his funeral is made the occasion of more outward mourning than was the funeral of the gallant hero and patriot, Philip Kearney. It is quite evident that even among the most respectable classes there are many that admired Heenan while he was living, and are ready to mourn him now that he is dead.

The conclusion follows that the conventional morality of the day has no very deep hold upon the masses. They may admit, theoretically, that prize-fighting and gambling are wrong, and that the man who practices them professionally is undeserving of fame. In fact, however, they regard a genial and kind disposition as a full atonement for the errors of which its owner may have been guilty. The real public sentiment as displayed by the events of the Heenan funeral is that Heenan was "a good fellow," and that, therefore, his little pugilistic and gambling eccentricities are not worth mentioning. His very career as a prize-fighter gave him a reputation for personal bravery from which thousands who never met him have argued his possession of the virtues of manliness and generosity which usually accompany bravery. Still, it is certainly a curious commentary upon our Christian civilization that the body of Heenan should be received here and in Albany, as though he were one of the heroes and saints of the century.—N. Office Furnishing a Specialty.

It is sometimes desirable, in fitting up offices and stores, to find a practical man, who not only knows how work should be done, but how it can be done cheaply without sacrificing the quality of the work. Then again if it happens that one desires to fit up in haste, time being a very important element in footing up the aggregate cost. To all such we most heartily commend Mr. James Hodge, 464 Hudson Street; he is an adept in his profession, and thoroughly reliable. Mr. Hodge keeps on hand a large assortment of office and store furniture, consisting of Desks, Shelves, Counters, Show Cases, etc.; and he makes a specialty of doing rapid work at a low price.

It is stated that the New Jersey Midland Railway Company will take possession of the track from Bloomfield to Middletown and will maintain from Jersey City through to the latter place. It is believed that the trains of New York and Oswego Midland will be returned to the New Jersey company's track, as the Montclair road is not in good condition, does not pay, and is not equipped with a telegraphic line. Several families along the Pequannock river below where the Midland Railroad accident occurred last week, have laid in a full supply of butter and cheese for winter use, which they caught floating from above. Freight and passenger traffic is picking up on the Midland.

An unfortunate and dreadful murder occurred in Flanders, near Dover, Morris county, Monday night, in which John Force, aged 17, shot and killed Henry Miller, a married man 30 years of age, in the latter's house in the west end of the township. It seems that Force had been on criminally intimate terms with Miller's wife, and that when Miller upbraided him for it, he deliberately shot and killed him in his own house. Both Force and the woman bore bad names in the county. The murdered man was respectable and generally liked.

Stokes at Sing Sing.

On Saturday Stokes was removed from the Tombs and after being handcuffed to a convicted forger named Couse, was taken aboard a Fourth Avenue car for transportation to the Grand Central depot. Very soon the vehicle was crowded. The passengers were evidently for the purpose of staring at Stokes. He, however, appeared too deeply absorbed in his own thoughts to take the slightest notice of their rude attention. Upon reaching the Grand Central depot Stokes and the other convict, attached to each other by the common slide handcuff, were conducted into the waiting room of the Hudson River Railroad, where a crowd was awaiting the 10:45 o'clock train. The occupants of the Fourth Avenue car together with a large number of people from the street, also crowded the waiting room, and the buzz on every side was on the recent trial and verdict. As soon as tickets were procured, the Deputy Sheriffs and their prisoners took their seats, the crowd still following and remaining on the platform until the train started.

Almost immediately after the train started from the depot the prisoner took out a cigar and commenced to smoke. At each station along the road crowds were congregated. On arriving at Sing Sing the prisoner was taken for a few moments to the hotel, where he partook of some refreshment. After this the party walked along the tract toward the prison, followed by a crowd of men and boys. At the prison door the warden, Mr. Hubbell, received the party. Stokes gave him a letter from Mr. Tremain, and the warden said a few kindly words to him. The handcuffs were then taken off, and Stokes stood for a moment chatting pleasantly. He was then called forward by the clerk, and the usual formal questions were put to him.

When Stokes bade his companions goodbye, his voice trembled, and as he turned away he drew his cap over his forehead, and applied a handkerchief, which a keeper had given him, to his eyes. He looked down the long corridor at those who had just parted from him, and his face showed that he felt forsaken. He was assigned to cell 177, and is to be the shipping clerk in the cigar manufactory, a very easy and comfortable position. According to the commuting table for good behavior he will serve three years and six months.

A BOOK OF STARTLING INTEREST.

WHAT CAN SHE DO?

BY THE AUTHOR OF

"Barriers Burned Away."

DODD & MEAD, PUBLISHERS. ONE VOL. 12mo. PRICE $1.75.

"What Can She Do?" is a Story of modern society; it depicts in the daughters of a wealthy family, reduced from great wealth to sudden poverty, the evils of a fashionable education, which only mocks in the hour of emergency and leaves its victims peculiarly exposed to temptation; it further shows how the heroine struggles bravely through difficulties arising mainly from her defective education, and achieves success in a large field of labor in which but few women are yet employed. Thus making good the motto of the book

"Hail honest toil thy hard brown hand,
May save the fairest in the land."
